The House resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee of 33.

Mr. Nelson, of Tenn., took the floor. He said he stood here to plead for his country. He did not wish to say snything that could be construed into favoring the scession movement on the one hand, or the Republican party, on the other. Notwithstanding the gloomy and disastrous condition of the Union. Congress has done nothing in the way of arresting the evil and relieving us from the dangers and difficulties, by which we are surrounded.

Gentlemen here discuss the questions said they were of Gentlemen here discuss the questions said they were of a fleeting and transitory importance, without considering the momentuous consequences involved. The two causes which lie at the foundation of the differences which characteries our deliberations are, first, the pride of opinion, second, party spirit. To adhere to these in the present crisis, is unworthy of the representatives of freemen.

Instead of diseminating with lightening speed the intelligence that nothing will be done and all hope is destroyed, if they would give evidence of an earnest disposition to perform their duty, there would be more probability of agreeing upon some plan of adjostment. He advocated the Crittenden plan which was rallying support sverywhere.
